Our favorite pregame parties and traditions from around the country

Best Postgame Celebration
The "Fifth Quarter" at the University of Wisconsin For Badgers fans, the party doesn't end after the clock winds down. Since the early 1970s, the marching band has taken the field for a "fifth quarter," during which fans sing and dance to tunes ranging from Top 40 hits to the crowd pleasers "On, Wisconsin!" and "You've Said It All."

Most Scenic Setting
The University of Washington Husky Stadium is located on the shores of Lake Washington, and before every game, hundreds of boats make up a tailgating flotilla. One popular route passes by the houseboats made famous in Sleepless in Seattle before turning toward the city skyline and the majestic Cascade Mountains.

Most Finger-Licking Food
Louisiana State University Forget burgers and brats—outside Tiger Stadium, you're more likely to find French Quarter favorites like spicy alligator, gumbo, and shrimp étouffée. No wonder Sports Illustrated once gave the school an A rating for tailgate eats.

AND THE BAND PLAYS ON The University of Wisconsin marching band entertains the stadium crowd during the postgame "fifth quarter."

Most Luxurious Digs
The University of South Carolina's "Cockabooses" In 1990, steel magnate Ed Robinson installed 22 gutted cabooses on the dormant railroad tracks outside Williams-Brice stadium and sold them for $40,000 apiece. Gamecocks devotees snatched up these "Cockabooses" and decked out the interiors in high style; they're now the site of pregame "railgating."

Biggest Transformation
Penn State University During every home game, State College, Pa. (population: 40,000), triples in size to become the third-largest city in all of Pennsylvania. Students camp outside Beaver Stadium for days beforehand, helping create an enormous tent city known as Paternoville (named for long-serving coach Joe Paterno).
