Swift dealt with Kanye West's VMAs diss in her usual way—with a song.

Despite her grown-up digs, Swift can still recall the pain of being a teenage outsider. "If I was going through a really tough day at school and I didn't have anyone to talk to or sit with at lunch," she says, "I would say to myself over and over again, 'It's okay because I can write a song about this later.'" Now, somewhere between normal and prodigy, between college and celebrity, between girl and grown-up, she likes to sit on the balcony of her multimillion-dollar property, which affords her a view of the Vanderbilt campus, and think about the road not taken.

"Sometimes I will make a glass of iced tea and watch life go by," she says, pantomiming craning her neck. "I chose one road and didn't choose the other, but I can still see what that one looks like. In the past year I figured out that happiness is what everybody wants more than anything. Now I think if you're in the middle of your day and you realize you're just happy in the moment, you should celebrate that."
